

The Guardian - Three Little Pigs

POLICE OFFICER: Little pig, little pig, little pig. Let us in. It's the police!

REPORTER: The third little pig is now being taken into custody so the spotlight is once again shone on the grey area of home owners' rights to protect their properties.

WOMAN VIEWER: This isn't right. The three little pigs are the victims.

INTERNET CHAT:

The wolf blew down two houses, he got what he deserved.

But the Pigs went too far.

You have every right to defend your property.

C'est ce qui arrive quand vous pénétrez chez quelqu'un.

Keep your chinny chin chins up fellas.

Boiling someone alive hardly constitutes reasonable force.

He is gonna break the law. You can't protect yourself in your own home.

A man's home is his castle.

MATT FITCH: If someone tried to blow my house down, I'd do the same.

YOU TUBE COMMENT: I knew the wolf, there is no way he could have blown down those houses. He had asthma.

REPORTER: The Wolf had asthma, so what's the truth about the pig's house being blown down? Inside job?

EXPERT WITNESS: There's no reason why those two houses, one made from straw, the other from wood, should have collapsed. Not even a healthy wolf's huff and puff could bring them down.

POLICE SPOKESMAN: The Three Little Pigs have confessed to conspiring to commit insurance fraud, framing the wolf in an attempt to cover their tracks. Their motive was financial as they struggled to keep up with their mortgage repayments.

JUDGE: Guilty!

CHAT:

I can emphasize

I'm behind on my payments too.

How could this have happened?

I've lost everything.
