

Solidarity with the rebels at war against the State and the power in the Maghreb and elsewhere

Since several months, the revolt has been growing and spreading from Algeria to Iraq. Thousands of rebels, young and less young, men and women shook the power while demonstrating, rioting, striking. Ben Ali and Mubarak left. May they croak!

According to the bourgeois and their allies (unions, parties, political organizations, and journalists) “the people demands democracy”... as if we would like to be controlled, imprisoned, dispossessed of our existence under the yoke of any government. As if democracy could solve all our problems by waving a magic wand. Bullshit!

Here, in Europe, the State kills us by using truncheon or jail for some, by using daily humiliations and misery for all. Here, the poor who don't have the good documents are imprisoned in democratic camps, then deported by charter flights. Defenders of this world are afraid of not being able to control us anymore. They are afraid that here we would not behave like good citizens anymore while going from a place we live in to a factory and then to a supermarket. They are afraid that they would not have plenty of money anymore. They are afraid that everywhere people get organized without leaders, without money and realize that from above only blows are raining on them.

When they advocate a change of system, the return to normal, and a democratic transition when everything is the unknown to explore and to build, it's a direct attack against our will to take our life in hand, against our freedom. They are afraid that we smash their fucking world, in a great bonfire, in a craving to live, right now, without any transition. It's the reason why they call for calm, return to work and routine, and surely not for “our own good”.

This struggle setting ablaze a part of the world since several months is ours. The struggle for existence, for freedom of all and everyone spits on the specialized bastards who want to split us into geo-socio-politico-cultural specificities.

We affirm our solidarity with the rebels who struggle on the other side of the Mediterranean, and everywhere against this world of death.

For a world neither with States nor with borders

Long Live Rebellion
